

GRANTS PROGRAM

with a direct focus on:

creating multi-sectoral dialogue

promoting the rights of migrant workers

understanding the impacts of COVID-19

research-based projects supporting outcomes for trafficked victims and vulnerable groups

Counter-trafficking efforts must respond to the needs of victims and groups vulnerable to trafficking in persons.

Policymakers have much to learn directly from trafficking victims and their advocates when formulating laws, policies, and procedures to combat trafficking.

Non-governmental organisations (NGOs) provide a range of critical services and referrals to trafficking victims in Southeast Asia, including working with vulnerable populations, identifying those at-risk, and coordinating with government agencies to support trafficked persons.

During COVID-19, the role of NGOs in providing frontline services and support to trafficking victims and groups vulnerable to trafficking has become even more essential.

NGOs have valuable knowledge and experience working directly with trafficked persons and at-risk groups, which can inform the evidence base for policy and practice reform in the counter-trafficking sector.

Working in partnership with government, NGOs can contribute to the effective implementation of the ASEAN Convention Against Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children.

In July 2021, ASEAN-ACT launched a grants program, providing approximately AU$100,000 to all nine organisations across the region, to strengthen advocacy for the rights of victims of trafficking and those at-risk, and contribute valuable evidence to inform policy reform.

ASEAN-ACT's nine NGO partners, spread across five ASEAN member states, have been selected based on their approach to counter-trafficking, their experience, expertise, and alignment to ASEAN-ACT's program principles and strategies.

Our partners are working to identify and support potential victims of trafficking and those vulnerable to trafficking, especially those vulnerable to labour trafficking who have been further disadvantaged by the pandemic.

GRANT SELECTION

ASEAN-ACT has selected these partners for funding in this initial phase based on their approach to counter-trafficking and experience, and their alignment with our program principles and strategies.

The NGOs will be contributing to the evidence base on trafficking and counter-trafficking, through the implementation of these projects and their own experience and expertise working on these issues, to inform policy dialogue.

The grants program focuses on vulnerabilities of migrant workers to human trafficking, and developing related inclusive public policy processes and dialogue. We are working with frontline and research-based NGOs to promote the rights of migrant workers.
